Canaccord Genuity Growth Fund -Manager's commentary

The Canaccord Genuity Growth Fund rose 2.11% during June, outperforming its benchmark peer group, the Morningstar EAA Fund USD Aggressive Allocation sector, which rose 1.46%.

US equities closed at a record high during the month, with the S&P500 surpassing 5,400 for the first time, led once again by a rally in mega technology stocks. Apple was one of the big winners, advancing 9.45%, as the company announced a partnership with OpenAI to bring ChatGPT into its operating systems and Siri. Meanwhile, Nvidia briefly surged past Apple and Microsoft to become the world's most valuable publicly listed company, although its reign was short lived with the shares declining 9% from their peak over the second half of the month. Nonetheless, the company has been the prime beneficiary of the demand for chips that can operate generative AI models and in two years it has been transformed from a $300 billion company, to one which is currently worth in excess of $3 trillion. The company's 150% share price return this year has accounted for approximately one-third of the S&P 500's 15.3%, although it is now the market's most expensive company in terms of valuation, trading at 23-times sales. The problem is that no one, not even the company's management, really know what the company's future sales are likely to be as there is simply no roadmap to go by.

From a macro perspective, the two most important pieces of news were the US Federal Reserve's (Fed) interest rate decision and the release of US CPI inflation data. US inflation came in significantly lower than expected, which initially sent US bond yields sharply lower, although this move was reversed following the announcement the interest rates were being kept unchanged. The statement accompanying the rate decision was little changed from May, with the language on inflation now stating, 'in recent months, there has been modest further progress toward the Committee's 2 percent inflation objective.' The Fed's dot plot chart, which outlines individual members' rate projections, has been difficult to interpret and within the most recent release it was shown there were 4 members predicting no rate cuts in 2024, 7 who expect one cut, and 8 forecasting two cuts. There's a desire to pivot to rate cuts and to continue cutting in 2025 but the committee seems split on precisely how soon this process should start. Back in March, the median expectation was for 3 rate cuts this year.

Turning to politics, while political developments make interesting news headlines, the shorter-term impact on financial markets is often overstated and outcomes are exceptionally difficult to predict with any degree of accuracy. Nonetheless, the political spectacle which garnered the most attention was the debate between Donald Trump and President Biden and specifically the disastrous performance of Biden. His performance was so bad that the odds of him winning November's election have plunged, while there have been mounting calls for him to step aside and allow another Democrat to be the party's nominee for the White House. It is entirely possible that Biden will stand down, with Vice President Kamala Harris, Michigan Governor Gretchen Whitmer and California Governor Gavin Newsom amongst the favourites to replace him.

Whoever inherits the White House will have a number of challenges to overcome. Most notably, 2025 may be the most consequential year for US taxes since the creation of the US income tax in 1913, with $3 trillion of expiring tax provisions. The debt ceiling also needs to be raised in mid-2025, creating a catalyst for action on the US deficit and debt. Many believe the US crossed an important red line in July 2023 when net interest costs hit 14 percent of tax revenue. Historically, that is the inflection point when the US moves from stimulus to austerity, and vice versa. The next US President has a difficult job ahead of them.

Over the course of the month, the equity weighting of the fund was reduced slightly through a sale of SPARX Japan and the Ninety One Global Environment Fund, with the proceeds invested into the iShares $ TIPS 0-5 ETF. With equity markets having made significant progress so far this year, it was felt prudent to marginally reduce risk, ahead of what has historically been a less supportive quarter for financial markets.

Finally, the fund also reduced its holding in the CT US Disciplined Core Fund and invested the proceeds into the iShares MSCI Quality Factor ETF. This trade was made in order to increase the fund's exposure quality stocks; those companies which exhibit a high return-on-equity, low leverage, and low earnings variability. It has been demonstrated that, not only do these types of company deliver outperformance over the long term, but they also fare relatively better than other types of company when market conditions are more challenging.
