Capital Gains Tax

Our investment style is an active one. We believe that once an asset appears fully valued, CGT considerations should not prohibit a sale taking place. While we will consider the CGT implications of transactions and look to mitigate gains where possible, they should not be a constraint to investment management decisions. Therefore, bearing in mind the comparatively modest annual tax free allowance, it may prove both impractical and imprudent to keep gains within the nil rate band. If this is a view with which you disagree, please inform us.
